Last night, CAA played host to an intimate crowd that ran the gamut from political activists to breast cancer survivors, from doctors to filmmakers, in honor of Nina Montee Karp and Joyce Ostin's film Breast Cancer: The Path of Wellness and Healing.

cancer survivor, she feels she owes her three daughters a cure.

And then the special 50-minute preview of the documentary began. First Melissa Etheridge, then a string of widely recognizable faces and their husbands very candidly discussed their experiences with breast cancer.

Everyone in attendance was thoroughly riveted and for good reason - the filmmakers (and panelists) had accomplished a great feat in bringing to light an issue at the forefront of women's most vexing medical hardships.
